A NEW MODOC WORD

General Edward Carney was seated outside of his tent. Several empty packing cases had been turned into a fairly efficient writing table for his personal use. He had fought with honor in the War between the States. Now he was in charge of an Indian campaign that was not to his liking.

"The Modocs are justified in their complaint," he told Major Walter Riley. "They gave up their tribal lands and the government agreed to put them on a reservation. All would have been peaceful had not that stupid mistake happened! To put them on the same reservation with their hereditary enemies, the Klamaths. There isn't sufficient land for both tribes to use for farming or to herd cattle, and the Klamaths outnumber them ten to one. I guess from their way of thinking, the Modocs did what looked fair and sensible. Insisted on going back to their tribal lands, but now those lands are in the hands of white settlers. So we are going to have unnecessary fighting and bloodshed. Here definitely is where common sense would be better than bullets."

Captain Walter Riley turned around. His eyes were focused on a middle-aged stout man in civilian clothing. John Petterson had come from Washington with orders from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He walked up to where the two officers were seated.

"We are wasting time waiting here, General," he complained. "You and your men should be in the field teaching law and order to the Modoc Indians. They must be returned at once to their reservation."

"But if we do force them back to the reservation," protested Major Walter Riley, "we will still have bloodshed. They will be wiped out completely. Then we will have to fight the Klamaths. There is a very easy solution to the problem. Put the Modocs on a separate reservation. We have government land east of the mountain range. Here they would have water for agricultural purposes. They can also fish in the river. And there is sufficient pasture for their cattle. You have sufficient power to transfer the Indians to this land and set it up as a reservation."

"Give in to them!" half shouted John Petterson. "They must learn once and for all that they have to obey the orders of the United States Government. We should be on the march before noon."

"But we are waiting for the Prince Albert Kid," explained General Riley. "He understands their tongue and ways of life. In addition he is a friend of Captain Jack, their chief."

"I have heard of this famous man of the West," admitted John Petterson. "Since he represents the law then it will be simple. He will order them to return to the reservation, and with your men, there will be sufficient force to make them obey."

The General sighed. He realized it was like speaking to a stone wall. Not the slightest impression was being made on John Petterson. He continued writing his report and the civilian representative went to his tent. At noon a rider came into camp. He dismounted from his brown stallion and turned the horse over to a guard. All eyes of the soldiers were on this man. He wore a long Prince Albert coat. From his hips swung his two pearl handled Colt's .45. The famous law man of the West went up to the General.

"Good to see you again, sir. I had to see the governor first. The situation can get out of hand. The civilians are forming themselves into a kind of an army. They are going to fight the Indians. In fact they are on their way now to intercept Captain Jack and his tribe. We better start at once. If the Indians do get to the lava beds east of Mount Shasta, they have a natural fortress. We will have to do some hard riding."

Within an hour camp had been broken. The men were all mounted and soon headed towards the southwest. John Petterson was satisfied. He was getting action and the Indians would be taught that the white man's law had to be obeyed. At three in the afternoon firing could be heard. Soon they saw a group of armed civilians.

"Good thing the Army is here," said one of the men. "I am Lewis Sonners. The men elected me leader of our group. Those Modocs wanted to get back their land. It's our land now and we have every right to fight for it, but we need help. They are behind the lava beds now. Apparently they must have prepared for such an emergency. Guess they have a cache of food and ammunition. They got their squaws and kids with them. The whole tribe is fighting. I tried to tell them that if they went away we would stop fighting, but their only reply was that here they lived and here they are going to die."

The civilians stopped their firing and waited for further orders. General Carney knew the vicinity well. He spoke to the Prince Albert Kid in a serious tone of voice.

"When it comes to fighting, Captain Jack is an expert. He was chief of scouts at Fort Henderson for five years after the war. You met him when he helped us against the men who were trying to stop the wagon trains. Suppose we try a flag of truce and talk terms."

The signal was sent and received. Soon a solitary redskin walked across the lava beds. He came to where the Prince Albert Kid was standing.

"I am Lone Wolf," he told him. "You know me. Captain Jack says you send man with big power to talk."

"That means Mr. Petterson will have to talk face to face with the Indian chief," said the Prince Albert Kid to the General. "I will go with him. No firing is to start again until we return."

At first John Petterson refused to go. He didn't like the idea at all.

"They should come here and talk with me," he pointed out. "We can defeat them anytime. You can get all the reinforcements you want. Those civilians are just itching for a chance to get rid of them."

"That's just the trouble," said the Prince Albert Kid. "Everyone seems intent on getting rid of the Modocs. It may not be a bad idea if Mr. Sonners also comes with us."

Soon the three white men accompanied the Indian known as Lone Wolf across the lava beds. Then they vanished from sight. There was a big depression on the other side of the lava beds which made the place a natural fortress with its deep protective trench. Only the Prince Albert Kid was permitted to carry his guns. Captain Jack greeted his friend warmly.

"You are here and it is a good sign," he said in English. "My people trust you. You tell the men with the guns to go away. Then take us to a land where we can live in peace."

"Mr. Petterson has this power," explained the famous man of the West. "He has orders from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

"Return at once to your old reservation and there will be peace," said Mr. Petterson.

"It is better we die here fighting like free men that we once were," snapped back Captain Jack. "Than to return and die slowly at the hands of our enemies."

"No use continuing this nonsense," said Mr. Petterson. "We go back and I will give the order to commence fighting."

"You stay here and watch us die," said Captain Jack. "You will not be harmed. We keep our words."

The Indians were running short of food, but they ate and fed their white visitors. An Indian woman walked up to Mr. Petterson and handed him her baby.

"Very sick. You make well, please."

He looked at the tragic sad face of the infant. He thought for a moment of his own children safe and well fed back at home. He looked around and saw several of the Indian children. They looked so old — and were so young. The little Indian baby cried. He swayed the baby back and forth in his arms. Then the crying stopped.

"My child likes you," said the Indian mother. "You must be good man. You help, please."

"There's a doctor with us," interrupted Mr. Sonners. "He has been helping us with our wounded. We'll get this woman and her baby back to our lines. I can see that the baby needs attention."

"You take her and the baby back with you," said Captain Jack. "I changed my mind. For ourselves, we are willing to die. But we have no right to condemn our young to a death from sickness and the lack of food. My people will put down their guns."

There was no cheering as the defeated Indians came across the lava beds. Soon the soldiers were feeding them from their army rations. A conference was called. Mr. Sonners presented his views.

"These lands are now ours according to the treaty made. We will see that the Modocs have sufficient food for about a month. From then on, the problem is yours, General."

"It is the problem of all of us," said a new Mr. Petterson. "I will give the orders now and create a separate reservation for them. General Carney can conduct them to their new home."

And so peace and quiet came to that part of the Far West. Mr. Petterson went back to Washington. Five years later he again met the famous man of the West.

"The Modocs have a new word in their language," said the Prince Albert Kid. "When they want to say Kind Man — they say Petterson."

I AM HERE TO AVERT WAR, NOT TO START ONE!

COWBOY WESTERN

THOUGH CALM AND UNTROUBLED OUTWARDLY, YOUNG EAGLE'S MIND WAS RACING AS HE TRIED TO ANTICIPATE CUNNING BEAR'S STRATEGY...

WE ARE NEARING FORT LANDERS! IF CUNNING BEAR IS TO ATTACK HE'LL DO IT THERE IN THE RAVINE!

FOLLOW THAT CRAZY INDIAN! THEY HAD AN AMBUSH RIGGED ON THE TRAIL! BUGLER-- SOUND THE CHARGE!

HO, TRAITOR! NOW YOU WILL...

WINGED 'IM! YUH DRIVE, INJUN, I'LL DO THE FIGHTIN'!

YUH SAVED US, YOUNG EAGLE! I APOLOGIZE FOR DOUBTING YOU! YOU CAN'T GO BACK TO YOUR OWN TRIBE! STAY IN THE FORT WITH US!

I WILL GO TO MY PEOPLE! MY MOTIVES WERE GOOD! I AM NOT ASHAMED!

COWBOY WESTERN

THE TRIBE WAS WAITING
EAGLE
THE
FACES
STERN, WAITING TO DECIDE...

THERE IS THE TRAITOR!
HE THINKS WE WILL SHOW
MERCY BUT HE IS WRONG!

I WANT NO MERCY--
ONLY JUSTICE!

THE RAID ON THE FOOD WAGON WOULD HAVE STARVED WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN FORT LANDERS. IS THIS THE WAY CUNNING BEAR FIGHTS A WAR? ON THE YOUNG AND OLD?

THE TRIBE LISTENED, WITHHOLDING JUDGMENT,
ONLY ONE MAN COULD NOT WAIT...

I SPEAK LAST--
WITH THIS ANCE!

WAIT!
IF YOU WANT TO FIGHT, FIGHT AS OUR
DID! YOU
TWO WILL MEET EACH OTHER ATOP
THE TOTEM!
THE WARRIOR
IN THE WRONG WILL

HE LED THE RAID AGAINST THE WISHES OF THE CHIEF! WHO IS THE TRAITOR? THE BRAVE
WHO DISOBEYED THE CHIEFS OR I WHO STOPPED THEM?

HE SPEAKS WITH TWO TONGUES
LIKE A WHITE MAN!

THAT IS GOOD!
CUNNING BEAR WILL WIN!

YOUNG EAGLE IS RIGHT!
HE IS WISE!
